AAVA Tightens Tenant Screening Procedures to Boost Security

Ayala Alabang Village Association (AAVA) has rolled out stricter screening procedures for incoming tenants to beef up security in the community.

The new guidelines require foreign tenants to present original copies of their Alien Certificate of Registration (ACR), Alien Employment Permit (AEP), or Special Resident Retiree's Visa (SRRV), while local tenants must provide original government-issued IDs like Driver's License.

The applicants will have to appear personally for a face-to-face interview with village officers, and photocopies of documents will not be accepted. AAVA President Bobby Santiago emphasized the importance of complying with the guidelines to avoid admitting unwanted elements into the village.

In addition to tightening the screening of tenants, AAVA will also impose stricter accreditation and screening procedures for brokers conducting business within the village. Residents have expressed support for the initiative, as tighter security measures are needed to keep the community safe.

AAVA has been responding to security concerns raised by residents, including issues related to POGOs and violations of the Single Family Residential Use Policy. The association encourages residents to report any suspicious activity and to cooperate with the new guidelines.

To address the security concerns, AAVA has increased patrols and is preparing to install additional surveillance cameras within the village. The association is also working closely with local authorities to address the issue of POGOs.
